THE WOMAN'S RIGHTS

Were Declared to be Wrong and Thereby Dame Fashion Got Her Into Trouble to the Extent of Five Dollars and Costs.

A special from Evansville, Indiana, under date of August 25, gives a tale of trouble as follows: For appearing on Main street and several of the other principal streets Sunday night in a dress that was, Miss Alice Powell, aged 19 and pretty was fined $5 and costs by Judge J. G. Wintrey of the Evansville Police Court.

"I did it," sobbingly, said the pretty girl in court, "because my girl friends said I was afraid to appear on the streets wearing the garb. I just wanted to show them I was not afraid to do it."

Dozens of men and boys followed Miss Powell after she had appeared on the streets in her new gown.

BROWNING REUNION

The eleventh annual reunion of the Browning family, was held on Thursday, August 20, in the grove of Mr. Thomas J. Browning, near Bainbridge. Over a hundred relatives and friends were present. The morning was spent in conversation and greetings. An excellent dinner was prepared for the occasion and at noon all gathered around the table to enjoy it. In the afternoon a short program was given. The exercises began with the singing of "Blest be the tie that binds," followed by prayer by Rev. W. H. Brown. Recitations were given by Frances Coffman, Nellie George and Isaac Browning. Rev. Brown made a very interesting and impressive talk. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: John C. Browning, president; Robert L. Browning, vice-president; Miss Hallie Browning, secretary, S. P. Browning, treasurer.

The next reunion will be held on the third Thursday in August 1909. The committee on arrangements will be Park Jackson, James L. Browning and S. P. Browning. Those attending from a distance were: Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Clark, of Perry, Iowa; Mr. and Mrs. Arch Mitchell, of Talbot, Ind.; Mrs. Luther Perigo, of Fowler, Ind.; Mrs. James Siddons, of Boswell, Ind.; Mrs. Frank Granger, of Lafayette; Mrs. Clyde Townsend and Mrs. William Purcell, of Indianapolis.

HENDERSON REUNION

An enjoyable occasion was experienced by those present at the home of N. M. Bohanon Delox, Thursday, August 20. There were almost a hundred relatives and friends present. The forenoon was spent in greeting one another and spreading the dinner which was above reproach. After partaking of the splendid repast a short business session was held in which the officers were elected for the ensuing year.

COLORED VOTERS ORGANIZE

Local Leaders Have Formed an "Independent Club" and Will Thoroughly Investigate the Issues of This Campaign Before Casting Their Votes This Fall.

THEY WILL DECIDE THEMSELVES

The colored voters of Greencastle and Putnam county have in the past few weeks been working toward the organization of an "Independent Colored Voters club." They now have the organization well under way and will within a few days meet and perfect their organization. At that time the officers of the club will be announced.

The object of the club is to study the political situation this fall so that they may be able to vote intelligently at the coming election for the men who will look after their best interests and welfare. The political situation will be thoroughly gone over and every member of the organization will have a thorough knowledge of the principles and men whom they will vote for.

The colored men have taken the right political step, if the club does the work it has planned. Each colored man should go to the polls this fall and cast his ballot for the interests that he, himself, has decided the best for him and his race.

THEY WILL DISCUSS TERMS

Business Men to Hold Special Meeting Tonight to Act on Traction Company's Fight.

COMPANY IS EAGER TO QUIT

A special meeting of the Business Men's Association of Brazil will probably be called for this evening to discuss the new turn in the traction fight and draft a set condition to be submitted to the Council to demand from the traction company in return for the withdrawal of the obnoxious speed ordinance.

As the traction company has evinced a desire to settle the trouble between it and the city rather than go into trial of the speed cases and continue to be harassed by the speed ordinance of six miles an hour, the business men have decided to meet and decide what should be demanded by the Council in return for dropping the fight on the company.

The traction company's position is a virtual admission that the city has it by the tail with a down-hill pull, on the speed question, and they are anxious to get out of their losing fight if they can only obtain reasonable terms from the city. Of course, the traction company wants to settle on its own terms, but if the fight is to be discontinued the business men want to have something to say to the Council. The business men intend to ask for more factors than merely the traction company's willingness to do what is right in the west National avenue sidewalk case.

A resumption of the local service between this city and Harmony, will be one of the points and others may be framed up to show the traction company that the business men are not as eager to end the fight as the company is—Brazil Democrat.

VISITED REELSVILLE LADY

They Lost Consciousness in Sleep, and Became Conscious When They and the Horse and Carriage Drove a Flim Flam Landing in the Ditch.

Lewis Slattery and Carl Glidewell were suddenly awakened from their slumbers last night and their blissful dreams were soon turned into scratching and tall digging to get out from under an overturned buggy.

They had driven to Reelsville to visit two young ladies and the wee sma hours of the morning had approached when they said good-bye and got into their buggy to drive home. When a short distance from the home of the young ladies they fell asleep and while snoozing in the buggy, unmindful of which way the animal was going, the animal went to one side of the road to pass a horse and buggy coming in an opposite direction when the wheels of the vehicle went into the ditch, overturning it and throwing the boys out. The buggy was badly broken and it is hinted that the boys rode home on the horse, but we will not vouch for the truthfulness of the statement.—Brazil Times.

ORDERS BUILDINGS RAZED

BUILDING WILL COST $50,000

The new Federal building looms large on the horizon! In less than thirty days the building on the corner of Walnut and Vine streets will be torn down and the ground cleared for the erection of the new building. This lot was purchased by the government for $10,000 and the owners notified to hold themselves in readiness to remove the buildings.

Last evening, post master John Dunbar received notice that the grounds would be required within a month and he in turn served notices to the property owners. W. A. Kreigh, who owns the building where the Slighs hotel is, C. M. Short, who will remove his ware houses and Mrs. Hanna who will remove the office formerly occupied by Dr. Hanna. September 25 is the day of grace and by that time the grounds must be cleared. Greencastle people are elated over the prospect of having the new $50,000 Federal building at an early date.

THE NOTE WAS NOT FORGED

Misunderstanding Regarding Signature on the Paper Which it Was Rumored That Clarence Runyan Had Forged, Caused Untrue Report to be Circulated Regarding the Young Man.

THE MATTER HAS BEEN SETTLED

Clarence Runyan, regarding whom a story of a forgery was circulated a couple of weeks ago, is now in South Dakota, at work in the harvest there. Since the young man left the alleged forgery matter has been cleared up. It has been learned that the young man was not in any way guilty of any forgery or other wrong.

The note given by him to Thomas Farmer, in payment of a horse was signed by his grandfather, John Runyan. At first it was said that the young man had forged the signature of his grandfather but this has been found to be untrue.

The sudden departure of Mr. Runyan for the west caused the story to be circulated. The note, however, proved to be good and the money was paid.

NO QUORUM, NO COUNCIL

Only Three Councilmen Showed up at the Meeting Last Night and so Nothing Could be Done—City Pay Roll Tied up and "Spitting Ordinance" Still in Hands of the City Attorney.

SPECIAL MEETING NEXT MONDAY

When 8 o'clock came last night the time for the council meeting, only three councilmen were in their seats. Just three were there and as it takes four to constitute a quorum there was no meeting of the council. The mayor and the three councilmen present, together with the city clerk, city attorney and city engineer, sat around and waited for nearly an hour but the needed man did not show up and the meeting was declared off.

As the result of the city claim ordinance is tied up and the spitting ordinance, which the city attorney, was ordered to prepare at the last meeting of the council, is still in his hands. He had the ordinance there last night and it was read by the councilmen present. It provides for a $10. fine for expectorating on the sidewalks or walls of buildings. Manager Newman of the Gas company, was there too, ready to present his petition asking for an extension of the Gas company's franchise. But he still has it.

Councilmen Graham, Young and Mahan were present. Mr. Donner is at Bay View and Mr. Kreigh and Rickets were in Indianapolis. There will be a special meeting of the council next Monday night to take up some improvement matters and it is probable that the claim ordinance will be passed at that meeting.

DR. JOHN B. DE MOTTE'S WORK

Paper by Minnetta T. Taylor at the J. B. DeMotte memorial meeting given by the Social Purity Department of the W. C. T. U. in the court house, Greencastle, Ind., August 18, 1908.

Last year and for many years previous, the Greencastle W. C. T. U. had the good fortune to number among its efficient honorary members, the greatest leader in that form of social betterment which demands a pure life and teaches how it may be obtained. Sixty years ago on the coming 21st of August, to which this is our nearest meeting day, John B. DeMotte came into this world for its blessings and improvement. Nearly a year ago, he went on into the broader life. That teaching voice; that helping hand; that brave, gentle, generous spirit, a little way from us; yet it is not far and his work must go steadily on, even here.

Every great advance in living is made by some finer spirit some keener mind, which first sees the facts as they really are, struggling with itself to shape its ideas clearly and fasten unwavering faith of them and then out of deep love for God and mankind, strives with the people to make them understand and do what it knows to be right and best.

Dr. DeMotte, of our own city, was one who early recognized the value of purity as a factor in life and saw how little the individual could ever hope to do or understand without it. At a time when there was more laxity of public opinion as to man's moral conduct than there was in the old days when it was said that a young man had to have his wild time before he settled down if he amounted to anything. Dr. DeMotte had established for himself and others, an absolutely high standard of conduct making the same demands on men as on women; and with all his heavy work as professor of chemistry in DePauw University, he was teaching this earnestly, constantly and courageously, as his manner was. The old college catalogues show that his Sunday afternoon lectures were on forming character, on the body's relation to the spirit, on the entire domination of the soul over both mind and matter, on the dangers of an ambition that was of the mind but not of the spirit.

Dr. DeMotte was the first to point out a new method of character building. It consists, briefly stated, in preserving the efficiency of the spirit by maintaining a uniformly clean and normal body for its work and information. Dr. DeMotte's scientific studies had taught him the great service that persistence of a motion, of a thought, of an action, renders in the world. He had learned the great harm that is done by an intermission in chemical action, especially when the intermission is an interruption. The integrity of a fabric, the resultant of chemicals, the direction of sound, light and heat waves are broken and deflected by interruption, strengthened and made effective by persistence. Science also emphasized another secret of life: that no material that has been injured is ever as good as it was before it was hurt. After getting his own full knowledge and endorsement of these truths, he began to consider whether they were applicable to the complex organism of man. He convinced himself, after patient and careful investigation in which he took note of every fact that could oppose or modify his theory, that it was correct.

Then he began to teach it publicly, showing in eloquent lectures that a single act of vice, although it might be bitterly repented could never be erased from the nervous system; and that a repetition of them constituted a weak spot to be guarded and dreaded and perhaps to break down at last; while good habits, or persistence in right living, formed a physical constitution that was almost a guarantee of continuance in the right way, with the peace, industry and wisdom belonging to such a life. That accordingly, parents should guard their boys as carefully as their girls since the boy has the same right to the advantages of a pure life as the girl and ought to have equally sound nerves when he is grown; that parents should be constantly with their children unless they know them to be under the best of care; that street playing should be forbidden, for a few minutes may destroy all the teachings of a good home. Dr. DeMotte saw so well that it takes only a little while to spoil a human life; he knew so thoroughly that after a human being has been degraded, he is never fit for the essence of existence, never has the spiritual apprehension to see and hear the fulness of the truth. "He that has ears let him hear," Christ said many times. But there were few that listened to Him who could hear. Animal trainers say the serpent is the only creature that cannot be taught anything. Next to it certainly comes the people of impure lives.

Dr. DeMotte taught pride in the real American: the man who does not take intoxicants or have any bad habits. He taught purity as a right and a glorious privilege, not as ascetic self-denial. He had a contempt for those who claim that an indulgence in small vices is the best way to keep from large ones. His work suggested a dramatic view of the

DEMOCRATIC NEWS

What Good Democrats Over the State Are Saying About Things Political in Indiana And Elsewhere.

John Pennington, who conducts a feed store on West Vincennes street, has made some figures which should prove very interesting in the coming campaign when the Republican orators go to telling about the full dinner pail.

"I have just been figuring how far the empty dinner pails would reach," said Mr. Pennington to a Call reporter. "There are estimated to be 4,000,000 people out of employment in the United States at present. Each of the four million have a dinner pail which is about 10 inches in length. Put these empty dinner pails together and they will make a string from New York to San Francisco and then back to New York again." Linton Call.

Thomas Marshall, the Democratic nominee for governor, addressed an enthusiastic gathering of Jeffersonville and New Albany Democrats the other day, and while there are a hundred saloons in these two cities, but five saloons keepers attended the meeting. A dark suspicion prevails that Jim Watson has used his Terre Haute and Fort Wayne tactics and whose wide field of ruin that opens up beyond a so-called ordinary vice: the deceit needed to hide it; the hardened heart; the blinded, helpless spirit; the nerves tending toward the same wrongdoing or demanding a stronger stimulant of crime; the discord between the body, the spirit and the external world; the inevitable revelation of guilt with its grief for the innocent ones connected with the guilty, and for the sinner himself the storm of shame and remorse so strongly depicted by the oriental poet: "And the wild regrets and the bloody sweats

None knew so well as I; For he who lives more lives than one More deaths than one must die."

Yet although so positive in his great and splendidly successful work, Dr. DeMotte could never have been called dogmatic in it. He did believe with all his might that boys and girls and men and women could live unspotted, noble lives and that they would be infinitely happier and more useful and the world would be infinitely better and more beautiful if they did. But he never exaggerated his position and never neglected a fact that was opposed to it. He was, I believe, the most carefully accurate speaker I ever heard. There were two causes for this: one was that he had no prejudices and consequently did not undervalue the statements made on the other side; the other was that he cared more for the truth than he did for its immediate effect on his audience. As the leading lecturer of his time, he knew very well that gray is not a color to please an audience which almost always requires that a statement be very black or very white with occasional contrasts of the two. But he never yielded to this and I have known him slightly to discourage a temperance meeting by a lucid and forceful presentation of the arguments on the other side and an exact account of the moderateness of temperance success at the point discussed. And yet he was one of the best friends of the temperance cause. He simply wanted us to give a reason for our hope and be able to meet the other side fairly. When we did that, he was as much pleased as any one.

His entire truthfulness was undoubtedly one of the great elements of his success in teaching by lectures. He presented no limitation of some one else, no patches of information bounded by ignorance and intolerance, no attempts to please by personal charm, no stale anecdotes nor local gibes. His were winged words that needed to be said, and they went straight home. A real view of life is always interesting. It is particularly so when the speaker is good at seeing and telling; when one subject interests him more than any other and yet he is able to see other subjects both in themselves and in their relation to his. Other great qualities his work showed plainly were liberality, growth, studentship and spiritual insight. There was none of the attitude of a respecter of persons in his lectures or talks. If the publican and sinner wished to return to the right way, Dr. DeMotte was glad of it, cordially helped him, did not remember the past against him and would probably even have eaten with him after the fashion of Christ, though at the same time he made it distinctly understood that his face was toward better things and any one who accompanied him must take that direction. He knew all sorts of people and could make allowance for all the different things that he knew had happened to them. His great compassion touched scooped the entire saloon outfit of the two cities.—Indianapolis Independent.

It is said the taxable property of Indiana has increased in value about $200,000,000 from 1904 to 1907. "Increased in value" is hardly the proper term. "Assessed" would be a better expression, for no one honestly believes the property today would sell for the same price it sold at any time between 1904 and 1907. The assessment was pushed up to get money for the extravagant state administrations for the past twelve years.

If there is an understanding that they shall not be molested, why is it that every trust in the country, from the oil and steel trusts down to the peanut combine is for Taft and a revision of the tariff by its friends, the standpatters.

The debt of Indiana was increased last year between two and three hundred thousand dollars that state officers might be given an increase in salaries amounting to $320,000. How do you like it, Mr. Taxpayer?

their many faults and lessened them although he knew how to be on guard against the faulty nature. Perhaps no teacher can be very influential if he shows himself incapable of growth. And yet it is the commonest thing in life. A lecturer is labelled as speaking on a certain subject. After hearing him once, although there may be superficial variations, you practically know what he is going to say. It was never so with Dr. DeMotte. He had always grown since you heard him before and his philosophy was wider, deeper and more penetrating. An unusual love of study remained with him and his work was continually enriched by information gained from books as well as life. Up to the very last, he was studying many social problems and was an eager and open-minded student of the best modern writings concerning them. The lecture he was planning to be called Perver of Life would have contained the ripest fruits of his wisdom. All he learned but served to minister to his spiritual insight which was his greatest gift. He looked at the boys and knew how and when they needed help; he looked at the girls, saw their differences and resemblances, their hopes and ambitions and knew how to make the best of them; he felt the discouragement of the workers for benevolence and of the student of the world's problems and gave sometimes the keener stimulus of personal criticism. But his rebukes never hurt because we all felt that he was much more severe with himself than he would ever be with us.

He left one beautiful and inspiring book called Character Building of which every one should have a copy of it if it could be secured. This he would revised and enlarged if he had remained with us. His lectures were thoroughly thought out never written. With characteristic modesty, he scarcely valued them enough to try to preserve them. Bishop McDowell very beautifully and truly said in his funeral address that our St. John slipped away from us in the night. But Dr. DeMotte did not think of himself as St. John. He just felt like any of the others of us, that he was doing part of a big work with some success, many failures and unknown results. He gently teased everybody he knew, with a bright and playful humor; he was occasionally quite discouraged, though few knew it.

His work, apart from the tiresome journeys, could not have been always agreeable to him. The old-fashioned prudishness which could better bear that evil should continue to exist than that its name should be mentioned, must have annoyed him. He "Holler Than Thou" spirit which hardly permits a sinner to reform lest he should become an equal, must have been a burden to him. His courtesy, tact and personal distinction repressed rude remarks but he could readily feel the ugliness of the unspoken sentiments. Collecting facts from slums and asylums could hardly have been a congenial task for one who was far above vulgar curiosity. But his former students, of whom I am one never heard him complain; and his cheerfulness was a matter of pleasure to all. I wish he could have known that he was most touchingly recognized by everyone, in the days when his stay with us had come to an end, as having earned the greatest of the beatitudes: "Blessed are the Pure in Heart for they shall See God." His funeral was full of that. It was the dominant note and made the occasion one of the splendour and triumph of immortality rather than the darkness and despair of grief. Well, perhaps he did know.

People of other towns and states are trying to preserve his work and thoughts. Let us who are here and knew him, try to keep the insight into life that he gave us. Let us remember that the boys do need to be guarded even more than the girls; that parents should be the companions of their children, that our own school yards should have monitors to guard the children at play; that Greencastle should have a play ground with wise, kindly and pure-minded cartakers, instead of the promiscuous and contaminating play in the streets. Let us remember that we are responsible if bad conditions exist and we must know whether they are bad or not and we must do our best to remedy them if they are. Dr. DeMotte set us a good example. Let us follow it as well as we can.

Why James Lee Got Well.

Everybody in Zanesville, O., knows Mrs. Mary Lee, of rural route 8. She writes: "My husband, James Lee, firmly believes he owes his life to the use of Dr. King's New Discovery. His lungs were so severely affected that consumption seemed inevitable, when a friend recommended New Discovery. We tried it, and its use has restored him to perfect health." Dr. King's New Discovery is the King of throat and lung remedies. For coughs and colds it has no equal. The first dose gives relief. Try it! Sold under guarantee at The Owl Drug Store, 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

Serious For Once.

An army captain on returning home from India brought with him a goodly stock of souvenirs. Among them was a pair of laughing jackasses, which he entrusted to one of the sailors, Tom Pinch.

Alas! The unaccustomed shipboard life did not agree with the creatures, and in spite of all Tom's care they pined and finally died.

When he discovered the catastrophe, Tom was in despair. "I daren't tell the captain!" "Don't shirk it, mate," said his pal. "Break it to him gently. You'll find it'll be all right." The advice seemed sound, and Tom sought the gallant captain.

"Scuse me, sir," he said, "you know them things below—what you call larlin' jackasses? Well, sir, they ain't got nuffin to hurt at this morning."—London Scrap.

His Choice of Weapons.

M. Victor Noir, an illiterate bully of the time of the second empire, for no real reason whatever sent a French statesman a challenge to fight a duel. Noir was a densely ignorant man, and nearly every word in the challenge was misspelled. The statesman responded with the following letter: "Dear Sir—You have called me out without any good reasons. I have therefore the choice of weapons. I choose the spelling book, and you are a dead man." The duel was never fought.

Excellent Health Advice.

Mrs. M. M. Davidson, of No. 379 Gifford Ave., San Jose, Cal., says: "The worth of Electric Bitters as a general family remedy, for headache, biliousness and torpor of the liver and bowels is so pronounced that I am prompted to say a word in its favor, for the benefit of those seeking relief from such afflictions. There is more health for the digestive organs in a bottle of Electric Bitters than in any other remedy I know of." Sold under guarantee at The Owl Drug Store, 50c.

Counting It Up.

OLIVE'S OUTLAW.

By TAYLOR WHITE.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

The outlaw had been making things pretty lively for the guests of the Spouting Springs hotel ever since the spring season had got fully under way.

As a business getter the outlaw was a huge success. No shore resort with an authentic sea serpent ever enjoyed such popularity, and the stages that met the trains from the east lumbered back over the twenty mile trail loaded to capacity with women who openly avowed their timidity and men who tried more or less successfully to conceal theirs.

Almost every afternoon the porch was crowded to witness the departure of the sheriff and his posse, and almost as regularly some of the guests came hurrying back to the hotel to tell how they had been held up and stripped of their valuables with an expedition that exceeded the speed of the man back of the marble counter in the rotunda. The latter kept the books and each day set down opposite each account a sum that would have obtained board and lodgings for a week at a hotel not cursed—or blessed—by a bandit.

Appreciating the fact that much of his booty was keepsakes and heirlooms, the bandit was always ready to trade back his plunder for the more convenient specie, and as the landlady insisted upon making good all losses there were no complaints. Indeed, the guests rather enjoyed being held up. It gave them something to talk about when their visit was over. Many of the visitors by oft repeated telling so embroidered the accounts of their individual holdups that the tales would have offered good material for magazines. But it was not until Olive Marchand came that the real sensation was sprung.

Until then the outlaw's taciturnity had been his most pronounced characteristic, but when the slip of a girl came rushing down the path from the springs to tell how Black Pete had not only held her up, but had detained her in conversation for more than an hour, every woman in the hotel turned envious. The following afternoon the banks of the stream fed by the springs were dotted with women waiting to be captured and talked to that they might share Miss Marchand's prestige.

Possibly it was for this reason that Miss Marchand, walking down the valley instead of toward the springs, was confronted by a little figure above whose square cut chin appeared a mask of black velvet that lent a deeper brilliancy to a glittering gray eye.

"I'm glad to see you this afternoon," was the greeting. "I rather thought I should find you here. The woods are so crowded above, and so I came down this way. I trust that you suffered no ill effects from the shock of our meeting yesterday."

"I rather enjoyed it," admitted Olive frankly. "I really think that the other women are envious."

Pete smiled at recollection of the goodly company he had passed on his way down the trail. There was no question about it. He motioned her to a seat on the fallen trunk of a tree and sat down beside her.

The girl was an eager questioner, and presently he was reciting of stories of adventure with a dash that brought the glow of excitement to Miss Marchand's eyes. To make it still more thrilling, there was a crashing sound among the trees, and without a word the outlaw swung himself up into a tall pine just as the sheriff and his posse came tearing along.

They paused long enough to warn the girl that Black Pete was supposed to be somewhere in her vicinity and that it would be well for her to return to the hotel by the trail instead of through the woods; then they hurried on, and Pete swung himself down from his perch.

"This is the easiest experience I ever had," he declared laughingly. "The sheriff trusts to numbers and hard riding, with the result that I have plenty of time to disappear when I hear him coming."

"It must be terrible to feel that you are a hunted thing," mused Olive, with a little shudder.

"That's the joyous part," declared the outlaw. "I am not hunted when the pursuit is in the hands of the sheriff. But let's forget the sheriff," he added. "I've told you all about myself. Now, turn about is fair play."

"It would seem so tame after what you have told me," she demurred, but she was soon deep in her subject, and it was not until the afternoon shadows lengthened that at last she recalled herself and hurried up the trail toward the hotel, where half a hundred disappointed women were already gathered upon the porch.

There was not exactly an arrangement to meet the following afternoon, but Black Pete had said that he would be over on "the branch," and she found him there in the late afternoon. This time he had removed his mask, disclosing a face in which there was no hint of the depravity with which he was credited. It was an honest, manly face, with frank, gray eyes and a tangle of crisp yellow curls above a smooth white brow. With the mask off, only two 45's swung on his hips suggested the bad man, and while they talked Olive forgot that she was in company of a man who was outlawed by society and upon whose head there was an increasingly heavy price "dead or alive," as the bills of reward read.

Pete escorted her nearly to the hotel by a short cut, and not until she came upon the hotel piazza and heard them discussing the holdup of that morning did she realize again that this was the man with whom she had been spending the afternoon.

Then followed weeks of indecision. Sometimes Olive would declare to herself that she would never see Black Pete again. At such times she hated herself for having given her love to a breaker of the law, but love have been given, and love is powerful above the law. Her periods of revulsion were sure to be followed by penitential moods, when she was glad to pass through the leafy aisles of the forest to their tryst.

The guests of the hotel profited by the absorption of the bandit, for days passed when no holdup was recorded, and the attendance began to fall off.

Olive was glad that the depredations were less plentiful, for these were largely responsible for her moments of self accusation. Finally, after one of his most brilliant feats, she at last decided to go where she might try to forget that she had ever loved him.

With eyes heavy with unshed tears she made her way to the little cave where they frequently met. Here they would say goodby. Pete had taught her to move so lightly that her foot falls scarcely were audible, and so it happened that she came upon two men talking in the shadows of a clump of pines without betraying her presence.

Her heart almost ceased to beat for a moment as she realized that the two men were Pete and Portman, the proprietor of the hotel.

"You will have to do better than this," Portman was saying. "You have only pulled off two holdups this week. It is getting too tame for the guests."

"I know it," admitted Pete, "but I have been busy."

"I pay you for your time," was Portman's angry retort. "You were to give me at least one holdup a day. My guests are disappointed if it doesn't happen, and you've got to earn your salary."

"I'm tired of the game," said Pete shortly. "Go get some one else to be your outlaw. I'm done."

"Now, don't get hot and throw up the job like that," urged Portman. "You know I can't break in a new man right in the middle of a season. It would take him a month to learn the paths, and the sheriff would catch him the first thing and spoil it all. I didn't mean to be so short. I'll give you $10 more a month."

"Do you think that if money was an object I'd be an outlaw for $30 a month?" demanded Pete. "No. You go get some one else on the job."

Portman's face was the picture of despair. His hired outlaw had been the making of the hotel. It would not be possible at short notice to find any one who could be trusted to rob the guests and who had sufficient woodcraft to escape capture.

He was still seeking a new argument to advance when a call from the underbrush caused both men to start. Pete went bounding into the thicket to confront Olive.

"So you've found out what a farce I am?" he cried.

"And I am so glad," declared the girl. "I knew in my heart that you were worthy. Pete, can't we have a honeymoon here in the woods? You can do the holdups in the morning, and I'll help. It will be such fun."

Pete's eyes twinkled. "I'll make Portman give me a week off," he cried, "and then we'll resume operations at the old stand."

"There will be an awful time with father," mused the girl, and Pete laughed again.

"No trouble there," he assured. "You see, I'm really Robert Parkman. We have some business deals on together, so he knows me. I'm only playing bandit because it promised more fun than mere camping out trip."

Olive gasped. She had heard of the eccentric millionaire. As Parkman took her in his arm the sheriff went galloping past on his way to join the posse in its afternoon jaunt after the outlaw.

"You beat the sheriff," he declared, with a tender laugh. "You have captured the outlaw for life."

"It looks as though it were the other way about," corrected Olive demurely as she glanced at the imprisoning arms. "My outlaw has captured me."

Early French Theaters.

The French theater owes its origin to the religious exhibitions given by the pilgrims on their return from Palestine. At these exhibitions the pilgrims gave an account of the Holy Land and recited their own adventures. They were afterward imitated by those who had never been to the Holy Land. To these succeeded dramatic representations of subjects taken from the new text, and, being forbidden by the priests of Paris, the priests of France invited the king to be present at an exhibition to prove that they were calculated to excite religious feelings.

The building in which these plays were produced was divided into three scaffolds. The highest represented paradise, the second the world, and the lowest, which was in the form of a dragon's head, represented hell. The only entrance to the two upper scaffolds was through the dragon's head.

The actors never left the stage, even to change their dress, and the plays were so long as to require several days for their completion. At the close of each evening the audience was invited to return until the whole were finished, sometimes forty nights.

THE HERO OF FLINT HILL

Jed Parker had been courting Mary Stevens for a year when he went to her father to ask the usual question. Jed was a young and worthy farmer living at the top of Golden Hill, and Jim Stevens, as he was familiarly called, lived in the village at the foot of the hill and was a contractor. His work was in the country around more than in the village. He was well liked, but people said he had some odd ideas. Jed Parker bumped up against one of those odd ideas as soon as he had stated his case to the father.

"Look here, Jed," was the reply. "Of course I know that you have been hanging around here a good deal, and I reasoned it out that Mary was the attraction. You are spoken of as a fine young man, and I have no objection to you as a son-in-law. I cannot say yes, however, until you have done something to distinguish yourself. I had killed a mad dog, shot at a horse thief and felled a lightning rod man before I was your age. I like you, Jed, but I want a hero for a son-in-law, and the sooner you toe the mark the sooner you and Mary can get married."

Jed didn't kick over the traces and raise a row, but came to the house as usual. Things were in statu quo when December and the snow and ice came. Golden Hill was a pretty steep hill, and the road winding up was half a mile long. In winter, when the road was slippery, teams went a mile around rather than go up or down. Such of the village boys as had the ambition to drag their sleds to the top came down with such momentum that they were carried through the village and to the foot of a hill on the other side.

Mr. Stevens had in his employ as contractor a gang of Italians. As winter came on they were just finishing up grading the highway three miles away. There was some misunderstanding about the pay for overwork. They made threats, but the contractor refused to be bullied. They hung about the village, muttering and menacing, and finally decided to take the law into their own hands. At 7 o'clock one evening a deputation called at Stevens' home and captured him before he knew what was up. He was taken out on the street and told that he must either pay or hang. The villagers gathered, but they were not strong enough to interfere. It was then that Mary sent a boy speeding up the long hill to bear the news to Jed.

"Go as fast as you can," she said. "Tell Jed that they are going to hang father. Tell him to come to the rescue. Tell him that I sent you. Tell him it's his chance to be a hero. Run as you never ran before, and I'll give you a dollar."

"What's a hero?"

"Never mind, but fly!"

The road was packed with snow and ice on top of that, but the boy got there.

"By gosh!" was Jed's only reply, and he began to hustle.

He had been drawing up wood that afternoon, and the bobbeds were in front of the house. He got his overcoat and fur cap and the family dinner horn, and as he dragged the sled down to the highway he said to the boy:

"Jim, we are going down the hill a-killing. You sit in front and begin blowing the horn as soon as we start. Blow, blow, blow! Hang on and blow. I'll sit behind and steer. Now, then, we're off."

The contractor was a man with sand. Even when he saw the ropes in the hands of the excited and determined gang he would not give in. They led him over the bridge to the foot of the hill, and as he was still obstinate they prepared to hang him to a handy limb. In fact, they did hang him. There were thirty in the gang, and while some kept back the villagers with their knives the others pulled on the rope and made it fast. Just as there was every prospect that the lynching business would be an unqualified success the blare of a horn was heard up the hill, accompanied by screeches and yells. Jed and the boy and the bobbeds were coming. They came like a runaway locomotive. The crowd hadn't time to take in the situation when the sled was upon them. It plowed through them like a shovel through flour. It ran over some; it flung others twenty feet away; it sent others sky high. There was scarcely a man left on his feet when the sled had passed, and this was the moment when Mary and a dozen or more came up and lowered the wriggling body. Over the bridge and through the village and half a mile beyond went the runaway, and by the time Jed got back to the bridge on foot the contractor had been carried to his own house and a doctor was working over him.

As for the gang, no one was killed, but there were broken legs and arms and bruises galore, and the town was little better than a hospital for the next month. There were two doctors in the town, and they had twenty-six patients to look after. Four days after the hanging Mr. Stevens sent for Jed and took him by the hand and asked:

"Have you and Mary settled on the day?"

"But I—I thought I had got to become a hero first?" stammered the young man.

"But if you ain't one then I'll never run another chalk line for the dagoes to follow! Lord, boy, if Napoleon had gone down the other side of the Alps on bobbeds he could have scattered the enemy without firing a single shot!"

Paid For Their Last Tributes.

In a letter written by Count Grzymala, who was an ardent admirer of Chopin, the last moments of the great musician are thus referred to: "A few hours before he died he asked Mme. Potocka to sing some melodies by Rossini and Bellini, and this she did with sob in her voice. Listening to her voice he passed away." Speaking of the funeral, the writer says: "Mozart's requiem and his own funeral march were performed with the assistance of Lablanche, Viardot and the concert society. It was characteristic of the times that the artists should have asked 2,000 francs for this last tribute to Chopin. One would have thought that pride would have kept them from selling their gifts on such an occasion."

Clothes and the Artist.

A now eminent English artist's first chance in life came when a certain noble lord invited him down to his country mansion to paint a view of the house. When he arrived the door was opened to him by the butler. "I am Mr. So-and-so," said the artist, who was emphatically bohemian in his apparel. "I have come down to paint the house." The butler surveyed the visitor's shabby clothes for an instant. "That's strange," he remarked. "His lordship ain't said anything to me about 'aving the 'ouse done up!'"

THE WONDERFUL WHEAT

Statements About it Very Contradictory—Leading Journals Investigate.

Recently the Journal printed an article which was floating around saying that the Alaskan wheat introduced by Abraham Adams into Idaho, with such unheard of results, was a fake. An article in the Saturday Evening Post, by Oscar F. G. Day, of Minneapolis, concerning a new and wonderful kind of wheat which is being experimented with in Idaho created much comment throughout the country. It was natural that doubt was aroused, for 222 bushels of wheat to the acre sounds like an unwarranted assertion. The assertion, however, was in keeping with the many that were made in the article. The Philadelphia North American conducted an investigation on its own accord and its report is a corroboration of the article by Mr. Day. Additional details of the discovery which Abraham Adams is said to have inadvertently made while prospecting in Alaska, are also given.

Falling to find gold the prospector returned to his Idaho home and then planted the wheat he had found. He did not think that he had made a discovery that now promises to be more important for mankind than the finding of gold in California. He merely wanted to do a little experimenting. He wondered if the wheat would grow in Idaho. It is hardly probable that in his widest dreams, if in fact, he did any dreaming about his experiment, he ever thought for a single moment that the results would finally be such as to make the whole country sit up and rub its eyes in wonder. He found, however, that his Alaska wheat grew quite as well in Idaho as in Alaska. After a sufficient crop had been harvested he submitted it to the government experimental station for a test. His experiment took time, he only had a single head of the wheat at first.

The North American in conducting its investigation telegraphed to Spokane, Wash., for further details. The answer which was received was substantially the same as that published in the Post, although the later report seems to throw some doubt on the manner in which Adams secured the seeds, it being asserted that they were sent to him by a friend in Alaska. The important thing, however, is that he did some experimenting.

Adams expects to clear $1,000,000

this year from his 700 acre farm. He estimates his crop at 70,000 to 75,000 bushels. He is selling it for seed at $20 a bushel. His son-in-law O. K. Hobe, of Minneapolis, is interested with him.

All the northwest is talking about the Idaho farmer and the discovery. The wheat has been found to yield 10 fold greater than ordinary wheat now grown. The world's average yield is only 12.7 bushels to the acre. Exceptional land yields 20 bushels. Some difference when compared with 222 bushels. Small wonder, indeed, that brokers and farmers are still skeptical. Small wonder that the North American investigated the article by Mr. Day.

The wheat industry of this country promises to be revolutionized, if the new wheat comes up to the present early indications. One thing is absolutely certain the whole country is interested in the report from Idaho. The interest will be increased as the experiments proceed.—Crawfordsville Journal.
